The article considers the influence of the world financial and economic crisis on the Krasnoyarsk region macroeconomic dynamics and structural changes in consumption and maintaining households, and compares it with the Russian economy as a whole. Living standards of the local population are higher than the country average, but the crisis had a stronger effect on them. Despite this, the economy of the region remains more stable. The State government bodies should not allow excessive growth of the marginal propensity to consume and let the destabilization of the macroeconomic dynamics. At the same time, it is necessary to take time-effective measures aimed at diversification and overcoming the export focus on raw materials.

Keywords: the economy of Krasnoyarsk region, macroeconomic dynamics, the world financial and economic crisis, structural changes, consumption of population.

Introduction

The crisis of the years 2008-2009 can be defined as the first Russian economy crisis since 1991, caused by some market factors. It cannot be considered to be the effect of only external or internal reasons. It is the combination of these factors that makes it specific.

The external impulse that launched the crisis processes was the events that took place on the world financial markets, that caused the abrupt fall at the Russian securities market. The Russian financial system easily “imported” the crisis because of its strong dependence on the foreign financial sources. Before the crisis, the increase of the banking system liabilities was mostly ensured by foreign investments: in the first six months of the year 2008, the increase of net foreign assets within the banking system counted up to 13,7 %, while the rate of the internal assets increase was 5,2 %.

In such conditions, the credit grip, which took place on foreign markets, immediately affected the Russian one. Export sectors appeared to be also dependent on foreign markets. The largest shares of overdue accounts receivable and payable by the turn of the year 2008 were typical for fuel and energy production sector: 16,9 and 17,0 %, respectively. Thereby, the external impulse was transformed into a strong internal factor of recession.
