

88
88

WHAT WILL HE DO WITH IT?

BY PISISTRATUS CAXTON

IN TWO VOLUMES
VOL. II.

LONDON
GEORGE ROUTLEDGE & SONS, LIMITED
BROADWAY, LUDGATE HILL
1902

BRADBURY, AGNEW, & CO. LD., PRINTERS.
LONDON AND TONBRIDGE.

CONTENTS.

---

BOOK VII.

CHAPTER I.

|  | PAGE |
|--|------|
| Vignettes for the next Book of Beauty, . . . . . | 15   |

CHAPTER II.

|  |    |
|--|----|
| "Let Observation, with expansive view, Survey mankind fromChina to Peru,"—and Observation will everywhere find,indispensable to the happiness of woman, A VISITING AC-QUAINANCE, . . . . . | 22 |
|--|----|

CHAPTER III.

|   |    |
|---|----|
| Mrs. Haughton at home to Guy Darrell, . . . . . | 26 |
|---|----|

CHAPTER IV.

|  |    |
|--|----|
| Mrs. Haughton at home miscellaneously. Little parties are use-ful in bringing people together. One never knows whomone may meet, . . . . . | 29 |
|--|----|

CHAPTER V.

|  |    |
|--|----|
| It is asserted by those learned men who have devoted their livesto the study of the manners and habit of insect society, thatwhen a spider has lost its last web, having exhausted all theglutinous matter wherewith to spin another, it still pro-tracts its innocent existence by obtruding its nippers onsome less warlike but more respectable spider, possessed ofa convenient home and an airy larder. Observant moral-ists have noticed the same peculiarity in the Man-Eater, orPocket-Cannibal, . . . . . | 37 |
|--|----|

CHAPTER VI.

|  |    |
|--|----|
| Fresh touches to the Three Vignettes for the Book of Beauty, . . | 46 |
|--|----|

CONTENTS.

CHAPTER VII.

|   |            |
|---|------------|
| Containing much of that information which the wisest men in the world could not give, but which the Author can, | PAGE50 |
|---|------------|

CHAPTER VIII.

|   |    |
|---|----|
| Being but one of the considerate pauses in a long journey, charitably afforded to the Reader, | 79 |
|---|----|

CHAPTER IX.

|                      |    |
|----------------------|----|
| Grim Arabella Crane, | 80 |
|----------------------|----|

CHAPTER X.

Most persons will agree that the toad is ugly and venomous, but few indeed are the persons who can boast of having actually discovered that "precious jewel in its head," which the poet assures us is placed there. But Calamity may be classed in two great divisions: 1st, The afflictions, which no prudence can avert; 2d, the misfortunes, which men take all possible pains to bring upon themselves. Afflictions of the first class may but call forth our virtues, and result in our ultimate good. Such is the adversity which may give us the jewel. But to get at the jewel we must kill the toad. Misfortunes of the second class but too often increase the errors or the vices by which they were created. Such is the adversity which is all toad and no jewel. If you choose to breed and fatten your own toads, the increase of the venom absorbs every bit of the jewel,

103

CHAPTER XI.

|   |     |
|---|-----|
| Our old friend the Pocket-Cannibal evinces unexpected patriotism and philosophical moderation, contented with a steak off his own succulent friend in the airs of his own native sky, | 124 |
|---|-----|

CHAPTER XII.

|   |     |
|---|-----|
| Another halt—Change of Horses—and a turn on the road, | 130 |
|---|-----|

CHAPTER XIII.

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| Colonel Morley shows that it is not without reason that he enjoys his reputation of knowing something about everybody, | 131 |
|--|-----|

CONTENTS.

CHAPTER XIV.

|  |             |
|--|-------------|
| Romantic Love pathologically regarded by Frank Vance and Alban Morley, . . . . . | PAGE135 |
|--|-------------|

CHAPTER XV.

|   |     |
|---|-----|
| Even Colonel Morley, knowing everybody and everything, is puzzled when it comes to the plain question, "What will he do with it?" . . . . . | 137 |
|---|-----|

CHAPTER XVI.

|                                   |     |
|-----------------------------------|-----|
| Guy Darrell's decision, . . . . . | 140 |
|-----------------------------------|-----|

CHAPTER XVII.

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| A Man's Letter—unsatisfactory and provoking as a man's letters always are, . . . . . | 141 |
|--|-----|

CHAPTER XVIII.

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| No coinage in circulation so fluctuates in value as the worth of a Marriageable Man, . . . . . | 143 |
|--|-----|

CHAPTER XIX.

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| Man is not permitted, with ultimate impunity, to exasperate the envies and insult the miseries of those around him, by a systematic perseverance in wilful—Celibacy. In vain may he scheme, in the marriage of injured friends, to provide armchairs, and footstools, and prattling babies for the luxurious delectation of his indolent age. The avenging Eumenides (being themselves ancient virgins neglected) shall humble his insolence, baffle his projects, and condemn his declining years to the horrors of solitude,—rarely even wakening his soul to the grace of repentance, . . . . . | 149 |
|--|-----|

CHAPTER XX.

|   |     |
|---|-----|
| Each generation has its own critical canons in poetry as well as in political creeds, financial systems, or whatever other changeable matters of taste are called "Settled Questions" and "Fixed Opinions," . . . . . | 153 |
|---|-----|

CHAPTER XXI.

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| In Life, as in Art, the Beautiful moves in curves, . . . . . | 157 |
|--|-----|

CHAPTER XXII.

|   |     |
|---|-----|
| A quiet scene—an unquiet heart, . . . . . | 159 |
|---|-----|