PREFACE TO VOL. VIII.

I HAD hoped to be able, in this Volume, to carry the history of Greece down as far as the battle of Knidus; but I find myself disappointed.

A greater space than I anticipated has been necessary, not merely to do justice to the closing events of the Peloponnesian war, especially the memorable scenes at Athens after the battle of Arginusæ, but also to explain my views both respecting the Sophists and respecting Sokratês.

It has been hitherto common to treat the sophists as corruptors of the Greek mind, and to set forth the fact of such corruption, increasing as we descend downwards from the great invasion of Xerxês, as historically certified. Dissenting as I do from former authors, and believing that Grecian history has been greatly misconceived, on both these points, I have been forced to discuss the evidences, and exhibit the reasons for my own way of thinking, at considerable length.

To Sokratês I have devoted one entire Chapter. No smaller space would have sufficed to lay before the reader any tolerable picture of that illustrious man, the rarest intellectual phenomenon of ancient times, and originator of the most powerful scientific impulse which the Greek mind ever underwent.

CONTINUATION OF HISTORICAL GREECE

CHAPTER LXII.

TWENTY-FIRST YEAR OF THE WAR.—OLIGARCHY OF FOUR HUNDRED AT ATHENS.

Rally of Athens, during the year after the defeat at Syracuse. B.C. 412.— Commencement of the conspiracy of the Four Hundred at Athens— Alkibiadês.— Order from Sparta to kill Alkibiadês.— He escapes, retires to Tissaphernês, and becomes adviser of the Persians.— He advises the satrap to assist neither of the Grecian parties heartily—but his advice leans towards Athens, with a view to his own restoration.— Alkibiadês acts as negotiator for Tissaphernês at Magnesia.— Diminution of the rate of pay furnished by Tissaphernês to the Peloponnesians.— Alkibiadês opens correspondence with the Athenian officers at Samos. He originates the scheme of an oligarchical revolution at Athens.— Conspiracy arranged between the Athenian officer and Alkibiadês.— Oligarchical Athenians—the hetæries, or political clubs. Peisander is sent to push forward the conspiracy at Athens.— Credulity of the oligarchical conspirators.— Opposition of Phrynichus at Samos to the conspirators, and to Alkibiadês.— Manœuvres and counter-manœuvres of Phrynichus and Alkibiadês.— Proceedings of Peisander at Athens— strong opposition among the people both to the conspiracy and to the restoration of Alkibiadês.— Unwilling vote of the assembly to relinquish their democracy, under the promise of Persian aid for the war. Peisander is sent back to negotiate with Alkibiadês.— Peisander brings the oligarchical clubs at Athens into organized action against the democracy.— Peisander leaves Athens for Samos— Antiphon takes the management of the oligarchical conspiracy— Theramenês and Phrynichus.— Military operations near the Asiatic coast.— Negotiations of Peisander with Alkibiadês.— Tricks of Alkibiadês— he exaggerates his demands, with a view of breaking off the negotiation— indignation of the oligarchs against him.— Reconciliation between Tissaphernês and the Peloponnesians.— Third convention concluded between them.—Third convention compared with the two preceding.—Loss of Orôpus by Athens.—Peisander and his colleagues persist in the oligarchical conspiracy, without Alkibiadês.—They attempt to subvert the democracy at Samos—assassination of Hyperbolus and others.—The democracy at Samos is sustained by the Athenian armament.—The Athenian Parali—defeat of the oligarchical conspiracy at Samos.—The Paralus is sent to Athens with the news.—Progress of the oligarchical conspiracy at Athens—dextrous management of Antiphon.—Language of the conspirators—juggle about naming Five Thousand citizens to exercise the political franchise exclusively.—Assassination of the popular speakers by Antiphon and the oligarchical party.—Return of Peisander to Athens—oligarchical government established in several of the allied cities.—Consummation of the revolution at Athens—last public assembly at Kolônus.—Abolition of the Graphê Paranomôn.—New government proposed by Peisander—oligarchy of Four Hundred.—Fictitious and nominal aggregate called the Five Thousand.—The Four Hundred install themselves in the senate-house, expelling the senators by armed force.—Remarks on this revolution.—Attachment to constitutional forms at Athens—use made of this sentiment by Antiphon, to destroy the constitution.—Demagogues the indispensable counterpoise and antithesis to the oligarchs.—Proceedings of the Four Hundred in the government.—They make overtures for peace to Agis, and to the Spartans.—They send envoys to the camp at Samos.—First news of the revolution is conveyed to the camp by Chæreas—strong sentiment in the camp against the Four Hundred.—Ardent democratical manifestation, and emphatic oath, taken both by the Athenian armament at Samos and by the Samians.—The Athenian democracy is reconstituted by the armament—public assembly of the soldiers—new generals chosen.—Alkibiadês opens correspondence with the democratical armament at Samos.—Alkibiadês comes to Samos, on the invitation of the armament.—Confidence placed by the armament in his language and promises—they choose him one of their generals.—New position of Alkibiadês—present turn of his ambition.—The envoys of the Four Hundred reach Samos—are indignantly sent back by the armament.—Eagerness of the armament to sail to Peiræus—is discountenanced by Alkibiadês—his answer to the envoys.—Dissuasive advice of Alkibiadês—how far it is to be commended as sagacious.—Envoys sent from Argos to the “Athenian Demos at Samos.”—Return of the envoys of the Four Hundred from Samos to Athens—bad prospects of the oligarchy.—Mistrust and discord among the Four Hundred themselves. An opposition party formed under Theramenês.—Theramenês demands that the Five Thousand shall be made a reality.—Measures of Antiphon and the Four Hundred—their solicitations to Sparta—construction of the fort of Ectioneia, for the admission of a Spartan garrison.—Unaccountable backwardness of the Lacedæmonians.—Assassination of Phrynichus—Lacedæmonian fleet hovering near Peiræus.—Rising at Athens against the Four Hundred—demolition of the new fort at Ectioneia.—Decline of the Four Hundred—concessions made by them—renewal of the public assembly.—Lacedæmonian fleet threatens Peiræus—passes by to Eubœa.—Naval battle near Eretria—Athenians defeated—Eubœa revolts.—Dismay at Athens—her ruin inevitable, if the Lacedæmonians had acted with energy.—The Four Hundred are put down—the democracy in substance restored.—Moderation of political antipathies, and patriotic spirit, now prevalent.—The Five Thousand—a number never exactly realized—were soon enlarged into universal citizenship. — Restoration of the complete democracy, all except pay. — Psephism of Dêmophantus — democratical oath prescribed. — Flight of most of the leaders of the Four Hundred to Dekeleia. — Theramenês stands forward to accuse the remaining leaders of the Four Hundred, especially in reference to the fort at Ectioneia, and the embassy to Sparta. — Antiphon tried, condemned, and executed. — Treatment of the Four Hundred generally. — Favorable judgment of Thucydîdês on the conduct of the Athenians. — Oligarchy at Athens, democracy at Samos — contrast..... 1-93
