MY DEAR SIR,

In former times, Dedications were usually the fulfilment of a stipulation, by which Patronage was to be purchased by Eulogy. But since Patronage has ceased to secure success to mediocrity, and complimentary phrases have become too trite to be gratifying, a Dedication has become a rare appendage to a book.

Nevertheless, it has always appeared to me an opportunity to be valued by a literary man, of expressing publicly his respect for the talents, and his esteem for the character
